

Wych Hazel

We may shut our eyes, but we cannot help knowing That skies are clear and grass is growing. When one has in charge a treasure which one values greatly, and which, if once made known one is pretty sure to lose, I suppose the impulse of most men would be towards a hiding- place. So, at any rate, felt one of the men in this history. Schools had done their secluding work for a time; tutors and governors had come and gone under an almost Carthusian vow of silence, except as to their lessons; and now with seventeen years of inexperience on his hands, Mr. Falkirks sensations were those of the man out West, who wanted to move off whenever another man came within twenty miles of him.
