Michael Koryta Following his dad's death, Remington James returns to the small North Florida town where he grew up to assume his father's life -- taking care of his dying mother and running the local gun and pawn shop. Picking up a camera again after a long hiatus, Remington returns to his first love, pursuing in earnest his lifelong dream of becoming a wildlife photographer. One fateful fall evening, as the sun sinks and the darkness expands, Remington ventures deep into the river swamp to try out some new equipment and check his camera traps. Encountering the kind of wildlife that made him want to be a photographer in the first place, Remington gets some of the best shots of his life, but he's about to happen upon the most dangerous animal of all -- a feral, patient, sociopath who wants Remington dead. While checking his camera traps, scanning the eerie images of overexposed deer and bats and foxes, Remington comes across the most haunting images of his life --- the frame-by-frame capture of a shocking crime. By exposing the criminal, Remington has exposed himself to danger, even possible extinction. Hunted like an animal, by the predator and his psychotic friends, Remington must do two things:

make it through the night and make it to the river --- and the odds of doing either are slim to none. An ode to the wild wonder of North Florida, Double Exposure is a minimalist marriage of the literary novel and the action adventure story. Double Exposure is a meditation on life and death and art and meaning you wont soon forget. If you love fine, lyrical, literary writing with mystery, romance, and suspense youll love Michael Listers DOUBLE EXPOSURE.
