

Mr. Personality

New Contemporary Romance by the author of the bestselling romance Always Famous and highly-successful author, Maxwell Tucker is screwed. He's never felt the need to learn to type having always written his books in longhand. It works for him and he's always had a typist on premises, but his last in a long string of typists has quit...and his next book is overdue. Then Nicole Miller sneaks into his penthouse, trying to get Max off her father's back and Max has a devious idea. Nicole's lovable, doofus father always means well, but he doesn't really think things through. With the goal of improving the once-prosperous family's finances, Alton has written a book on how to succeed in business. But in writing his self-published manual, Alton has plagiarized large sections from major author, Max Tucker's highly-acclaimed fictional novel about business practices in the United States. And now Tucker is suing. Not knowing Tucker's dilemma, Nicole--who has always looked after her dad--takes on the job of averting this disaster, but she's shocked when Max insists she become his typist for the summer or he'll ruin her dad. But Nicole has her own life and she isn't going to spend the summer catering to a jerk! Can a snarling, unhappy genius finish his book and still win the girl? Here's what reviewers are saying about this romance! I couldn't stop reading this until I was completely finished.
